Title of Drama: Jalandharāsuravadha, “The murder of Demon Jalandhara” written under Purandharasimha (1560- 1597) of Pātan.

Manuscript: NGMPP Reel No. E 460/33 (The first part)

This article is a report of research in a provisory form.¹ My English is yet to go through a checking by a native speaker. In spite of many faults it contains, I decided to publish it, thinking that it will be of great public benefit.

This drama is based on a legend contained in the Śiva Purāṇa. Demon Jalandhara, born from the ocean, is considered the brother of Lakṣmī. In p. 22, l. 1 of our manuscript, he is said to be a very handsome man renowned in the world. This might sound a bit peculiar to us, for, in our modern age, the demons are habitually depicted as ugly and terrifying. In addition, Jalandhara is not necessarily depicted as completely evil. Only, he challenges the power of gods, and as the result, he is defeated.

Intriguingly, a reminiscence of this story is found in the Devī Nāc Dance performed during the Indra Jātrā Festival in Kathmandu city.² This dance drama handed down by the inhabitants of Kilāgal quarter represents the fight between Kumārī, i.e. Goddess Caṇḍī’s daughter and a demon (daitya) whose name is not mentioned. The role of Kumārī is played by a masked male actor. Kumārī is considered a beautiful (sundarī), smart (cancal) goddess [Maharjan VS 2073: p. 58]. Meanwhile, the demon is considered as having a handsome face (sundar anuhār) and a sturdy body (sugathit śarīr) [ibid., p. 59]. Actually, it is played by a handsome young man unmasked with a diadem. Thus, I wonder whether the demon might be a metaphor of a human challenging the god, like Jacob, although in our case, the challenger is defeated after fighting with fierce desperation. From other point of view, it looks like a battle between a beautiful woman and a man. In fact, in the performing arts of the Newars, it is often observed that demons are not necessarily hundred percent bad; they might have committed an error, but with a certain reason. Although I am not sure whether it has a direct connection to the Devī Nāc, the Indra Jātrā Festival itself has the legend of Yalambara, the king of Kirāṭas, i.e. the barbarians, in the background. All these matters suggest that this drama of Jalandhara should not be observed as a simplistic antagonism of good vs. evil.

² I express my heartfelt thanks to Mr. Nātikājī Maharjan, the organizer of the Devī Nāc. Also, thanks to Yagyaswor Joshi, M. A. for his assistance in my field research.

³ I present a diplomatic edition, i.e. a Romanized reproduction of the original text as it is in the manuscript, without the attempt of normalization, i.e. correcting the corrupted spellings into spellings considered as authentic Bengali.

²⁷ A sign resembling the letter of number 1 in shape.

³⁵ I.e. This letter is totally blackened in the shadow when filmed, but obviously it should be la, according to the context.

³⁸ A sign resembling the letter of number 1 in shape.

³⁹ My teacher read it as o, but it seems not necessarily to do so.

⁴⁰ I.e. kāmadhenu. Pulita seems to be pūrī-ta ‘in the city’ (Loc.) or pūrita ‘filled’.

⁴¹ I.e. rṣi, stotra, svacche

⁴² = mora

⁴³ = dullabha-purī

⁴⁴ By mistake, it is only written na ka.

⁴⁵ The letters bha ya are quite damaged by a wormhole.

⁴⁷ Here, nāga means ‘elephant’.

⁴⁸ Description of Indra accompanied by his consort Sacī.

⁴⁹ = sura-pati, but maybe contaminated with śūra-pati.

⁵⁰ The letter va looks like ve, merely because the ink is simply faint.

⁵¹ Nw. “The song of service/worship”.

⁵² Nw. “Indra went out”.

⁵³ Śata-makha is an epithet of Indra. Or else, perhaps its literal meaning is to take: “We have performed the hundred sacrificial rites.”

⁵⁴ Pāyuro is obscure. Maybe B. pāula ‘hurried stepping’ [Sen 1971, vol. 2: 537]?

⁵⁵ Śukra is the guru of Asura-s.

⁵⁶ This letter is badly blurred and very difficult to identify.

⁵⁷ = veda

⁵⁸ = ekāke sura-guru bolati nāme

⁵⁹ vālaka? The letter va is accompanied by a small point.

⁶⁰ I.e. mr̥ta-sañjīvanī, i.e. the charm of resuscitation of the dead.

⁶¹ Nw. “Śukra went out.”

⁶³ = karivo

⁶⁴ Skt. ghasmara ‘voracious, glutinous’. Ghasmara is one of Jalandhara’s messengers.

⁶⁵ Rāhu is here considered as one of Jalandhara’s messengers.

⁶⁶ I.e. vikaṭa, vadane

⁶⁷ I.e. khadga

⁶⁸ = vīre

⁶⁹ Nw. “[He/They] came in[to] Jālandhara[pura].” Nw. vava is a past tense of vaya [Dic. Cl. Nw.: 459].

⁷⁰ In the lower margin just under the letters ra nā, a letter bhā is written as an addition to be inserted in some place. However, the place to fill in is not indicated. Is bhā an abbreviation of bhāsa ‘speech’?

⁷¹ An X sign indicating the insertion. The addition to be inserted (in brackets) is indicated just below, in the lower margin. It means Nw. “Here, [he] has gone to Jālandharapura.”

⁷² Nw. “Sukra comes in the assembly.”

⁷³ This song is parallel to the one in p. 7, l. 1.

⁷⁴ The letter ri, distorted, is difficult to identify. It rather seems that the scribe tried to amend his mistake (bhathā?) into bhathari. We have bhathari again in p. 8 (this page), l. 8, while bhathyāli in p. 13, l. 3.

⁷⁵ Nw. “Ghasmara sent a messenger to Indra.”

⁷⁶ I.e. ekatāla. This perhaps reflects the real pronunciation in Newari, with its tendency to omit the final consonant.

⁷⁷ = sura-guru purohita. Sura-guru is an epithet of Br̥haspati.

⁷⁸ The letter ṇa is lacking.

⁷⁹ The letter ha is lacking.

⁸⁰ Nw. “Br̥haspati went (i.e. exit).”

⁸¹ = saṅkata

⁸² After this, the whole line is left empty.

// indra sabhā vava⁸⁴ //

this blank afterwards. Then, he made the mistake to write prīya śaci etc. which actually belongs to the next line, in this blank.

⁸⁴ Nw. “Indra came to the assembly.”

⁸⁵ Nw. “[He/the two] went to Amarāvatī.” Or else, it is perhaps a mistake for amarāvati varṇṇanā “The description of Amarāvatī.”

⁸⁶ = surapati ghare

⁸⁷ = veda-dhvani-svare

⁸⁸ = sāre?

⁸⁹ = sakala, vicāre

⁹⁰ Nw. “The messenger came to Indra.”

⁹¹ These two stage instructions are cancelled. Nw. “The messenger went back (lihā vayāva)” or “[They] sent back the messenger.” “Indra [and] Śacī.” Presumably, the scribe was intending to write a dialogue of Indra and Śacī after the messenger has returned.

⁹² Nw. “The messenger’s word.”

⁹³ A sign resembling the letter for nāgarī 1 in shape.

⁹⁴ The tendril-formed sign for r is very thin. Perhaps dhanāśrī.

⁹⁵ Patāla perhaps reflects the real pronunciation of pratāla.

⁹⁶ The ending -rom seems to be a past tense 1 person.

⁹⁷ = viparīti

⁹⁸ Nw. “The messenger came back.”

⁹⁹ Nw. “Indra went to the fight.”

¹⁰⁰ = rāṇa-rāṇe

¹⁰¹ “I will defeat.”

¹⁰² = ratane

¹⁰³ I.e. morā, gelā, kari

¹⁰⁴ The scribe first wrote kāre falsely, seemingly because of confusion with the following kare, then amended it into kāhe.

¹¹⁰ I.e. vipra-guru, vārtā

¹¹¹ Nw. “Lakṣmī stopped/prevented Kṛṣṇa [from leaving].”

¹¹² The letter svā, blurred and difficult to identify, seems to be an amendment of some other letter. Kariho seems to be a future imperative.

¹²⁷ This letter, seeming to be an amendment of another letter, is a little bigger than the usual ra. Or else, it is perhaps na, i.e. nāri ‘woman’?

¹²⁸ The letter ka has a strange form.

¹²⁹ The shape of this e slightly differs from the e in the next line.

¹³⁰ When considering the rhyme na bhela in the next verse-half, it is perhaps a corrupted form of dina gela ‘the day has gone.’

¹³¹ It can be read in various ways: neni, teti.

¹³² I.e. suprabhu

¹³³ < Skt. alpa-jnāna. Gadādhara is the author of this verse.

¹³⁴ The letter va is lacking.

¹³⁶ The vowel sign of i (i-kāra) has a washed-out color. Perhaps it was erased by the scribe, resulting in jovana (< yauvana).

¹³⁷ My teacher read rupa. But the letter ru has a very strange form. Or else, it might be bhaya, which seems to be a conjugated form of bhū (see below).

¹³⁸ I.e. dina-māṇi

¹³⁹ This bhaya seems to be a conjugated form of bhū.

¹⁴⁰ Hari is coming to the jungle, through the middle of [...].

¹⁴¹ = vana-mālā

¹⁴² Perhaps jana or jala

¹⁴³ Peculiarly, two oblique lines (which seem to function as a sort of comma) are put vertically one above the other.

¹⁴⁴ I.e. tilaka simgāra (< śrṅgāra)

¹⁴⁵ I cannot identify this letter. My teacher read it as di, but the usual da-letter looks otherwise. It might be also ki.

¹⁴⁶ From the beginning of this page, the writing hand changes again.

¹⁴⁷ Seems to be a mistake for vijaya.

¹⁴⁸ Or perhaps caturāyihe. If analyzing it as caturāyi he, this sentence means: “You (or someone) created my cleverness (B. caturāi).” Or else, if analyzing it as caturā yihe, it would mean: “To me, [something] wonderful (caturā) was created (= has happened) here (B. ihe).”

¹⁴⁹ I.e. pūrva, ekhane

¹⁵⁰ I.e. hailo, morā, pūrane

¹⁵¹ Interpreted as B. se āne ‘[he] brings’ or ‘[someone] brings it’. Or else, seāne would be the same as seānā ‘clever, cunning’.

¹⁵² The insertion of the ra letter is indicated at the end of the last line.

¹⁵³ The upper half of this letter is damaged due to a worm hole. It seems to be a ligature (X + n). I interpreted it as sa[m]panne. Another option is sapatne ‘enemy’. Or else, a corruption of sapane, although much less possible?

¹⁵⁴ = saṅkāta. In this manuscript, the śrībindu (transcribed in m) has the shape of a smal hook.

¹⁵⁵ I.e. apavāde. The second letter which is unidentifiable is cancelled by the scribe.

¹⁵⁶ The mention of Śacī indicates this statement is Indra's.

¹⁵⁷ I.e. śirasā, eka-mane

¹⁵⁸ = tiri < strī

¹⁵⁹ Seems to be a corruption of saṅkā.

¹⁶⁰ Maybe B. āiso. However, I suspect that this sign resembling the vowel sign of u (u-kāra) was originally a halanta, which was mistaken by the transcriber.

¹⁶¹ Maybe B. āilo. We had āyiron (p. 4, l. 6) for 1st person singular past tense. Perhaps the labialization of the vowel -yu- was caused by the influence of -om-. Or else, it is a mistake of a ya letter with a halanta, i.e. āyro. A case of the ya letter with the halanta is found in jāyvo (p. 18, l. 4).

¹⁶² This letter mā has a strange form.

¹⁶³ The letter se is noted in the lower margin just under ge su.

¹⁶⁴ Nw. “Mahādeva’s word.”

¹⁶⁵ = sira < śira

¹⁶⁶ This word seems to be lanaramga, or lanalaṁga (= rāṇa-rāṅga), although the third letter (blurred) does not look like ram nor lam. On the other hand, lanarage is found in p. 18, l. 6.

¹⁶⁷ It seems to be a corruption of samara.

¹⁶⁸ I.e. bāḍa ramge.

¹⁶⁹ The insertion kala is indicated above thāna. Besides, thāna is bracketed by two x-formed signs, which might indicate cancellation. However, thāna is indispensable for the metric reason.

¹⁷⁰ I.e. nīca-mati

¹⁷¹ It seems that originally it was written paḍi□□ (paḍitāla?), which was afterwards cancelled by the scribe. Besides, the X-formed signs indicating the insertion of gaṇḍara is set between paḍi and □□.

¹⁷² A strange letter which looks like the left half of va or ka. Presumably the scribe just started writing a letter, when he suddenly realized it was false and left it uncompleted.

¹⁷³ Maybe a corruption of atiśaya?

¹⁷⁴ I.e. pramāṇa

¹⁷⁵ The first letter ta of talāsa (= tarāsa) looks like ty; perhaps influenced by Skt. trāsa.

¹⁷⁶ = hari-nayanā

¹⁷⁷ Abbreviation of ekatāla

¹⁷⁸ The letter ya has a halanta sign.

¹⁷⁹ I.e. ratha carhi sainya sahite

¹⁸⁰ The letter vo is indicated just above ni je.

¹⁸¹ The letter śrī is indicated on the above to the right of nā.

¹⁸² Obscure. Is it an abbreviation of svāmī?

¹⁸³ It seems that samgrāmāre was amended in this way, or the converse might be the case.

¹⁸⁴ Seems to be a corruption of saṅkhā.

¹⁸⁵ I.e. rāṇa-rāṇge

¹⁸⁶ This is the same song as in l. 4.

¹⁸⁷ The two letters na va are badly blurred. Maybe viyari. It seems to correspond to Skt. akāraṇavaira.

¹⁸⁸ = Skt. kirīta ‘diadem’.

¹⁸⁹ I.e. citraratha, susvara

¹⁹⁰ I.e. urvaśī

¹⁹¹ = rasa

¹⁹² = vīṇā

¹⁹³ “Upon seeing Shiva and his avatars (sic followers?) dominate the battlefield, Jalandhara created an illusion of beautiful apsaras singing and dancing. This distracted his army but not himself. Meanwhile, Jalandhara disguised himself as Shiva and went to Parvati in order to trick her.” [Wikipedia Jalandhara]

¹⁹⁴ Here again ekatā, which is not a mere abbreviation of ekatāla, but must reflect the real pronunciation by the Newars.

¹⁹⁵ I.e. B. āiso. The ya letter has a halanta sign. It almost looks like āyusva, but is actually not.

¹⁹⁶ I.e. morā kole baśiyā

¹⁹⁷ I.e. nirlajja, pāpa-phale

¹⁹⁸ The first two letters of this name of tāla is badly blurred due to amendment. Something like pa krī or ma krām seems to have been amended into e ka.

¹⁹⁹ Obscure.

²⁰⁰ It should be apajasa lāge.

²⁰¹ Obscure. Maybe related with Skt. pūti-gandhi ‘foul-smelling’.

²⁰² The letters tā la are badly blurred.

²⁰³ I.e. Br̥haspati

²⁰⁴ I.e. Goddess Bhavānī/Durgā

²⁰⁵ The mark of insertion is indicated, but the letter to be inserted is found nowhere. I added ya according to the context.

²⁰⁶ The letter su is badly blurred. I presume the word to be suka (< Skt. śoka).

²⁰⁷ I.e. caraṇa-śarāṇa, vairi.

²⁰⁸ I.e. prasanna

²⁰⁹ I.e. vṛttānta. The last syllable -la is obscure. Perhaps some confusion like vṛttāntara?

²¹⁰ Āyā is obscure. Or else, is it some corruption like ayojane?

²¹² Seems to a corruption of uttarapāda, i.e. “The word[s] of response” by Nārāyaṇa.

²¹³ Cancelled.

²¹⁴ The vowels of these three letters are obscure, because the horizontal line is totally blurred. The second letter t[?] might be t[ā].

²¹⁶ The upper part of this letters is damaged by a worm-hole.

²¹⁷ The speech of Vṛṇḍā.

²¹⁸ The name of the rāga seems to be a corrupted form of śrī gandhāra. The last word gaṇḍara seems to be a tāla-name.

²¹⁹ Perhaps the third letter of mukuṭa is lacking.

²²⁰ It is only written matya, lacking r.

²²¹ The insertion of lo is indicated in the lower margin.

²²² Almost looks like rupa. There is nothing but a subtle difference between the vowel sign of u and that of ū.

²²³ The ya-letter has a halanta sign whose shape resembles the vowel sign of u. Peculiarly, it lacks the horizontal line, which is also observed in āyro (p. 20, l. 7).

²²⁴ It is obviously a way of writing torā, but the scribe might have confounded it with Skt. tvara ‘fast’.

²²⁵ Nw. It seems to mean something like “The song rose up (= was performed).” It might be read me uṇa or me duṇa (but its meaning is obscure in this case).

²²⁶ The letter vi is added above to the right.

²²⁹ I.e. pīdilo, rati

²³⁰ As mentioned above, the microfilm contains only one folio.

²³¹ The insertion of hme is indicated in the lower margin.

²³² Seems to be a corrupted form of śāṅkā.

²³³ Or else, cora.

²³⁴ Nw. “[The speech] of Kṛṣṇa.” I.e. Kṛṣṇa, disguised as Jalandhara, importunately woos Vṛndā who is refusing.

²³⁸ B. pohā- ‘to pass over (with difficulty) the night time’ [Sen 1971]

²³⁹ This seems to be a part of a Rādhā-Kṛṣṇa song, mentioning Barāyi.

²⁴⁰ The tāla-name ṣarjjati, i.e. Kharjati, appears for the first time. The word order tāra ṣarjjati also differs from the method in the former pages.

²⁴¹ = tīra ‘the shore’.

²⁴² The scribe wrote this word over his wrong writing (maybe tārayive?).

²⁴³ Or ma? However, dayā dāruna dukha na dije* “Mercy please, don’t give [me] a dreadful pain” makes good sense.

²⁴⁴ Or kare?

²⁴⁵ A reconstruction would be: dukhero upara dukha, sahana na jāya*.

²⁴⁶ This word is written over a writing mistake. The letter jā is recognized with difficulty.

²⁴⁷ I.e. sehi sukha hailo.

²⁴⁸ I.e. vadhiyā ‘having killed’.

²⁴⁹ The Newari da-letter has the same form as the Bengali ta-letter. Supposing the scribe/scribes had the original manuscript written in Bengali script, it might have been aṣṭāṁga-ta, namely, -ta could be interpreted as the locative ending. In that case, this sentence would mean: “Because of separation from Rādhā, it burns in my whole body (lit. in the eight limbs).”

²⁵⁰ This tāla-name appears for the first time.

²⁵¹ The ra-letter is written over a writing mistake (sa?).

²⁵² Maybe a corruption of śambhu, or svayambhū.

²⁵³ The scribe, having erased a phrase, wrote a new phrase over it. It seems that at first the scribe had written sišetosimdula* in the place in which now □□□śūla is written; thereafter, he erased it and rewrote it from the beginning of the sentence. One of the repeated śūla śūla also seems to have been erased. As the result, we have sišeto simdula śūla lā. Obviously, sišeto simdula is a corruption of śūrṣeto sindūra. A parallel sišeto simdure is found in p. 27, 1. 1.

²⁵⁴ Maybe su-lalāṭa-tilaka-candre? A thin trace of erosion is seen under the letters ta tiraka.

²⁵⁵ I.e. bhuja-latā. Perhaps bhujalatā-e is a locative.

²⁵⁶ = jvare

²⁵⁷ Or: keha māre?

²⁵⁸ Maybe rū, but I cannot see a very subtle difference between the signs of u and ū.

²⁵⁹ I.e. kājjala, kājala.

²⁶⁰ Parallel to siše[to] siṃdu[la] (p. 26, l. 3).

²⁶¹ = susvara

²⁶² I.e. B. mudita bhāndāra (Śrīkrṣṇakṛtana dānakhaṇḍa, Fol. 29v = 62th song)

²⁶³ Seems to be a mistake for pati yoga. There is a parallel tora patiñjoga nahi in p. 27, l. 6.

²⁶⁴ = vana-mālī

²⁶⁵ Hahme is an exceptional spelling for ahme, that I have not seen before.

²⁶⁶ Very difficult to identify, being written over mistaken words.

²⁶⁷ Or else, gocāri

²⁶⁸ The sign of the long ū is clear.

[Here, this Rādhā-Kṛṣṇa text breaks off. From the next page, the writing hand changes. Again, it is a rough style of writing.]

²⁶⁹ I.e. tora pati joga nahi “My youth is not matching to you.”

²⁷⁰ The second half of this verse is parallel to p. 27, ll. 3-4.

²⁷¹ This song is parallel to the song contained in NGMPP E167/37 (second part p. 18, ll. 5-6). There, the text is as follows: dhanāśrī // atā // suvanasāgidha tibhūvana pati tuhme, rasika vanamāli, ahme kichu nahi jāne mugudha govāre, kāma sarupa tuhme kāmi[nī] mohāna, tyarā pati joge nahi, jobhana ahmāra, vigasitapopā jathā tathā madhukare, mukurītāpopā se hya dura parihare.

²⁷² I.e. ekatāla

²⁷³ Perhaps a corruption of hitāmrta.

²⁷⁴ This ra-letter resembles ca in shape.

²⁷⁵ Difficult to identify. The scribe has amended a wrong letter into la.

²⁷⁶ It seems to be a corruption of a-mila milaya ‘to unite the ununitable’.

²⁷⁷ The insertion of dhru is indicated in the upper margin.

²⁷⁸ “The pair of the home became enemies.” Kela seems to be the same as Brajabulī kera [Sen 1971].

²⁷⁹ Or else: vānīja, i.e. Skt. vāṇijya or vāñjija?

²⁸⁰ The vowel sign of e is blurred. It might be ra, i.e. parara.

²⁸² Or maybe kova.

²⁸³ The na-letter is added below to the right.

²⁸⁴ I.e. this is a Vidyāpati song.

[From the next page 29 onward, another drama, i.e. the Kṛṣṇacaritra, is contained. This part will be dealt with in another report.]

²⁸⁵ The śrībindu has a strange form of a small hook. It might be the vowel sign of ī, i.e. ghī.

²⁸⁶ A small letter resembling e is written in the lower margin, below to the right of ha. However, śivasimhae would not be suitable.

King Śivasimha of Mithilā was Vidyāpati’s patron [Jha 1954: 22], and his name, accompanied by his epithet Rūpanārāyaṇa, is frequently mentioned in Vidyāpati’s bhanitā-verses. Lakṣmīdevī (Lakhimādevī) was his queen [ibid.].

On the other hand, Śivasimha is also the name of a king of Kathmandu (AD 1578-1620) [Regmi 2007 II: 46ff], who defeated King Puarandarasiṁha of Pātan and incorporated Pātan into Kathmandu [Regmi 2007, II: 267f].

²⁸⁷ The insertion of ra-letter (or na-letter) into line 2 (or 3?) is indicated in the lower margin just below the rā-letter of nārāyaṇa. However, the place in which it should be inserted is not marked.

²⁸⁸ A typical bhanitā-verse of Vidyāpati songs. Compare it with another one contained in Jha [1954: 136, song no. 135]: bhanaī vidyāpati are re juvati abe cite karaha uchāha / rājā sivasimha rūpanarāena lakhimādevi-varanāha //
